

CONTEMPLATING THE VOID

June 21, 2011

By Michael Erlewine (Michael@Erlewine.net)

Butterflies and flowers I too love, but I am fascinated by the idea of sentient beings (even a fly) being out there in the world like each of us are.

The dharma teachings say all beings want to be happy and no being wants to suffer. That is the equation we all are embedded in. When I see little beings like this fly out there with me in the early morning light, perched on a stem above what to them must be a vast space, I find it awesome.

So please forgive me for another fly photo.

